THE PRESIDENT

K. S. (Bud) Adams, Jr.

BUD ADAMS

A few years ago, in a Miami hotel room, Bud Adams met with owners of the Chicago Cardinals and negotiations began for possible purchase of the Cardinals by Adams. The young Houstonian wanted 50 per cent of the football franchise. Cardinal owners offered only 49 per cent and negotiations fell through.

Adams for several years has eyed possible pro franchises for Houston, but was stymied until the American Football League was organized.

Adams, a devoted football fan who uses his private plane to hop from game to game, is a 38-year-old oil executive who was audacious enough to start his own oil company while he was in his twenties and has watched it record an amazing growth. Today, his Ada Oil Co. services some 600 stations. In addition he formed Adams Petroleum Corporation and owns Adams Petroleum Center, a massive building which calls for expansion to 18 stories.

Other interests include ownership of a chain of five-and-ten stores, a restaurant with private club, a ranch, and uncounted real estate holdings.

Adams is the son of K. S. (Boots) Adams, Sr., chairman of the board of Oklahoma's giant Phillips Petroleum Co. Adams' interest in football goes back to his college days at Kansas where he was a fair halfback for two seasons.

He came to Houston in the mid-Forties and established his Ada Oil Co. He is President and sole owner of the Houston Oilers.

As a rookie in 1943, he played for the Washington Redskins, Eastern Division champs that year. Navy service interrupted his pro football, but he played in 1944 for the unbeaten Bainbridge team, and while stationed at Notre Dame in 1945 was an assistant under Hugh Devore.

He returned to pro ball in 1946 with the Cleveland Browns and played six years, making all-pro as an offensive lineman four years and serving as Paul Brown's offensive captain his last years.

Rymkus, a native of Royalton, Ill., is 41 years old. He played high school ball at Tilden Tech H. S. in Chicago, making all-city and all-state teams as a tackle for three straight years. He also won the city high school wrestling championship and lettered as a shot putter. Sought by all major midwest college teams, he chose Notre Dame. JEPPESEN STADIUM

OILERS' BUSY STADIUM

At Jeppesen Stadium, home of the Houston Oilers, there will be 53 football games played this fall, an average of four for each week of the football season.

Except on Sundays, when the Oilers play, the concrete seating spaces will more than accommodate the turnouts (mainly for high school games). Bud Adams is the man being thanked for this, for the Oiler owner voluntarily expanded the capacity of the public schools, stadium by 64 per cent, increasing it from 22,000 to 36,000, at a cost to his team budget of $250,000.

It was a high price, but Jeppesen Stadium will allow the Oilers to have a home until Houston has a new all-purpose stadium available for pro football.

Adams came across Jeppesen Stadium when his bid for 70,000-capacity Rice Stadium was firmly turned down. Jeppesen, built in 1942, became Adams' only hope, but its 22,000 capacity wasn't enough for a financial break-even point even if completely sold out.

Adams negotiated, forked up a quarter of a million dollars for a 14,000 seat expansion project, and was given rental rights at $4,000 per game. Concessions and parking fees go to the Houston school system.

Not the ideal stadium, Jeppesen will serve the Oilers well until others are available.

OILERS ON TV

Once again millions of sports fans across the nation will come to know Houston better as six Oiler home games appear on the ABC Television Network. No enterprise in our city's history has placed Houston in the eyes of the nation like the coming of the Oilers in the American Football League. While Houston's home games are blacked out for some 100 miles, again you can follow the Oilers on road games by tuning them in on KTRK-TV, Channel 13.

HOUSTON OILER FOOTBALL NETWORK

Radio play-by-play of all Oiler games, both at home and away, will be brought to you in 1961 through the facilities of Radio Station KILT, 610 on your dial.

Sportscaster Frank Fallon, noted for his crisp and accurate description of football action, will be calling the play-by-play on the Houston Oiler Football Network, with KILT originating the broadcasts for all stations along the line.
